ideo is the result of a collaborative effort between state and l agencies and organizations brought together under the 100th an Initiative. The purpose of this effort is to prevent the spread of a and zebra mussels into the western US. Major funding was ed by the US Fish and Wildlife Service and Pacific States Marine ies Commission.

are two distinct parts to this video:

(29 minutes) provides the viewer with background information quagga and zebra mussel origins, distribution, biology and ort vectors; a detailed assessment of the impacts they can have ecology, economy and culture as told by representatives from s regions of the country and from all affected user groups; and on how to avoid being part of the problem and becoming a part solution. This segment is designed to be shown to all audiences ing state, federal and local resource management agency nnel, law makers, policy makers, service organizations and all roups.

(17 minutes) is a watercraft inspection and decontamination g video. It includes a detailed step-by-step demonstration of how duct an inspection of various types and sizes of trailered craft for the presence of quagga and zebra mussels. It also es a similarly detailed demonstration of watercraft and equipment tamination using both a low cost portable wash system and a permanent system.

ecent discoveries of quagga mussels in the lower Colorado Basin ebra mussels in Colorado and central California have magnified portance of public education and outreach to make certain that one gets involved in efforts to assure that we Don't Move A sel!

Bill No. SB 343

The invasion of quagga and zebra mussels from the eastern US could be devastating to lakes, reservoirs and rivers of the western US.

They are here... and how we control their spread on trailered watercraft presents a huge challenge.
