

Retailers and Consumers across Montana have been working to change the state law regarding the dating of fluid milk in Montana. Montana state law requires milk to be dated for 12 days from the date of pasteurization as the last day the milk can be sold. This is a sell by date, not an expiration date, but Montana retailers are required to toss this milk. Consumers across the state routinely toss out milk once it is past this sell by date, not understanding that the milk is perfectly fine and wholesome for many days after that.

Milk in other states across the country has an 18 to 21 day shelf life. There is no difference in the milk; it is pasteurized the same way by dairy producers across the country. A 12-day rule does not improve the taste of milk, or make it any safer. What it does do is increase the cost of the milk to Montana consumers.

Milk produced and bottled in this state, by in-state producers, is being stamped with the longer shelf life date, put on a truck and shipped out of state and sold for a cheaper retail to those consumers outside of Montana. Why should Montanans continue to pay more to dump 100s of gallons of milk down the drain every day? If you feel this is an unfair practice that rips off Montana consumers, please join us in telling our Montana Legislators please Pass Bill LC1923

Retailers and Consumers across Montana have been working to change the state law regarding the dating of fluid milk in Montana. Montana state law requires milk to be dated for 12 days from the date of pasteurization as the last day the milk can be sold. This is a sell by date, not an expiration date, but Montana retailers are required to toss this milk. Consumers across the state routinely toss out milk once it is past this sell by date, not understanding that the milk is perfectly fine and wholesome for many days after that.

Milk in other states across the country has an 18 to 21 day shelf life. There is no difference in the milk; it is pasteurized the same way by dairy producers across the country. A 12-day rule does not improve the taste of milk, or make it any safer. What it does do is increase the cost of the milk to Montana consumers.

Milk produced and bottled in this state, by in-state producers, is being stamped with the longer shelf life date, put on a truck and shipped out of state and sold for a cheaper retail to those consumers outside of Montana. Why should Montanans continue to pay more to dump 100s of gallons of milk down the drain every day? If you feel this is an unfair practice that rips off Montana consumers, please join us in telling our Montana Legislators please Pass Bill LC1923

This is a bill to give the milk consumers of Montana the truth about how long they can expect their milk to be fresh, healthful and safe. It would be a true use by date set by the processors who have federal regulation to follow. This is how our neighboring states do it. It would stop the destruction of perfectly good milk due to the current 12 day sell by rule. It would allow a better choice of products for Montana consumers that are not available now due to the current rule. It would allow for advancement in the industry without restrictions.

Please let someone on the committee know you support giving consumers the correct information on a food product.

Milk in other states across the country has an 18 to 21 day shelf life. There is no difference in the milk; it is pasteurized the same way by dairy producers across the country. A 12-day rule does not improve the taste of milk, or make it any safer. What it does do is increase the cost of the milk to Montana consumers.

Milk produced and bottled in this state, by in-state producers, is being stamped with the longer shelf life date, put on a truck and shipped out of state and sold for a cheaper retail to those consumers outside of Montana. Why should Montanans continue to pay more to dump 100s of gallons of milk down the drain every day? farmers across Montana have been working to change the state law regarding the dating of fluid milk in a state law requires milk to be dated for 12 days from the date of pasteurization as the last day the milk is sold is a sell by date, not an expiration date, but Montana retailers are required to toss this milk. Consumers routinely toss out milk once it is past this sell by date, not understanding that the milk is perfectly fine and safe any days after that.

Milk in other states across the country has an 18 to 21 day shelf life. There is no difference in the milk; it is pasteurized the same way by dairy producers across the country. Retailers and Consumers across Montana have been working to change the state law regarding the dating of fluid milk in Montana. Montana state law requires milk to be dated for 12 days from the date of pasteurization as the last day the milk can be sold. This is a sell by date, not an expiration date, but Montana retailers are required to toss this milk. Consumers across the state routinely toss out milk once it is past this sell by date, not understanding that the milk is perfectly fine and wholesome for many days after that.

Milk in other states across the country has an 18 to 21 day shelf life. There is no difference in the milk; it is pasteurized the same way by dairy producers across the country. A 12-day rule does not improve the taste of milk, or make it any safer. What it does do is increase the cost of the milk to Montana consumers.

Milk produced and bottled in this state, by in-state producers, is being stamped with the longer shelf life date, put on a truck and shipped out of state and sold for a cheaper retail to those consumers outside of Montana. Why should Montanans continue to pay more to dump 100s of gallons of milk down the drain every day? Retailers and Consumers across Montana have been working to change the state law regarding the dating of fluid milk in Montana. Montana state law requires milk to be dated for 12 days from the date of pasteurization as the last day the milk can be sold. This is a sell by date, not an expiration date, but Montana retailers are required to toss this milk. Consumers across the state routinely toss out milk once it is past this sell by date, not understanding that the milk is perfectly fine and wholesome for many days after that.

Milk in other states across the country has an 18 to 21 day shelf life. There is no difference in the milk; it is pasteurized the same way by dairy producers across the country. A 12-day rule does not improve the taste of milk, or make it any safer. What it does do is increase the cost of the milk to Montana consumers.

Milk produced and bottled in this state, by in-state producers, is being stamped with the longer shelf life date, put on a truck and shipped out of state and sold for a cheaper retail to those consumers outside of Montana. Why should Montanans continue to pay more to dump 100s of gallons of milk down the drain every day? If you feel this is an unfair practice that rips off Montana consumers, please join us in telling our Montana Legislators please Pass Bill LC1923
