Description of fiscal impact: This bill changes the definition of “employment” regulated by the Department of Labor and Industry Employment Relations Division. It is anticipated that additional audit, investigation, and adjudication workload for the department will result from these changes, however, the department is unable to quantify what that financial impact might be.

FISCAL ANALYSIS

Assumptions:

Department of Labor and Industry

1. The changes implemented through SB 367 may result in additional disputes, as well as add complexity to the routine disputes the Employment Relations Division currently investigates.

2. This bill will result in additional time for the Unemployment Insurance Division staff in performing federally required audits to determine employee-employer relationships. Determination of this relationship will become more complex, and thus more time-consuming for field auditors and tax compliance auditors. Additionally, an increased workload in adjudication of claimant eligibility determinations and an increase in appeals is expected, but the department is unable to quantify what this impact might be.
