Background Materials and Research

Topic Summary:

Charter schools are publicly funded schools that generally operate with a greater degree of autonomy than other public schools under a contract with an “authorizer.” The contract, or charter, includes performance expectations and a procedure for renewal, as well as revocation of the contract if performance expectations are not met.

Montana is one of six states (as of 2018) that do not have charter school laws. Legislation establishing charter schools in statute is frequently proposed and typically draws large crowds to lengthy hearings.

There is mechanism for school districts seeking to create a charter school through administrative rule in Montana, under ARM 10.55.604. The Board of Public Education determines whether to grant, deny, or renew the charter. Charter status granted under this rule in and of itself does not allow any greater autonomy for the school. As of June 2018, two districts have been granted charter status for schools under this rule. It is debatable whether charter schools established under this administrative rule are truly charter schools; they do not seem to match the federal definition of “charter school” and likely would not qualify for federal funding to support charter schools.
